GREATER CHICAGO CHAPTER Notes

2013 Vol.1

OUR THIRD WORKSHOP: A COLLABORATION WITH THE CHICAGO CHILDREN'S MUSEUM

Dr. Rekha S. Rajan began the workshop with an overview of how music and movement are inextricably linked to creative experiences. She asked the questions of what can we learn about the connections between music and the brain? What do we learn when watching young children be musically creative?

Mary Sue Miller is a lead educator and the early learning program manager at the Chicago Children's Museum at Navy Pier. In her session, she engaged attendees in movement exercises, helped everyone identify developmental movement patterns, gain strategies for creating supportive environments and acquire tips for facilitating infant's and toddler's kinesthetic experience.

Please join us for our fourth workshop: Tapping into Technology where we will explore the latest apps and resources for integrating technology in music and movement activities with young children. We are thrilled to have Dr. Kristin Lems, professor of education at National-Louis University, an expert on supporting ESL/Bilingual learners through music. We also have Brigid Finucane, Merit School of Music, who has previously presented with our chapter to rave reviews. She will delve even more deeply into how we can use technology to teach music and movement. Be prepared to bring your iPad, e-reader, or smart phone, and get ready to click, move, and learn!
